Location: Higher Education Center in Medford

Description: Leaders and managers regularly report that effectively managing the performance of both high and low performers while implementing successful empowerment processes are some of the most challenging aspects of their job. The Dynamic Empowerment course provides specific tools, techniques, and processes for managing people based on their performance level, capacity, and mindset. Drawing upon leadership practices used by today's top organizations, this course provides participants a practical set of methods they can begin to apply immediately in their own work environments.

Learning objectives:

- Learn the “Three C’s of Empowerment” and how they can enable you as a leader to set people up to win regardless of their current performance level.
- Discover the three styles of managerial coaching that enable leaders and managers to delineate challenges and establish clear lines of accountability with their people.
- Explore pre-assessment processes used upfront by effective leaders to level-set expectations, and establish the type of rewards, and consequences that reduce misunderstandings and excuses downstream.
- Learn to apply a Situational Leadership model that supports your people in continually growing and expanding their capability and performance levels.
